Isis videos 'excite' group's supporters

- Evidence from the Twitter, Facebook, Ask.fm and Instagram accounts of 450 foreign fighters in Syria and Iraq and others who follow them suggests the filmed murders and speeches attacking Washington and London appear to have made Isis's cause more glamorous to extremists abroad, according to the International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation (ICSR) at King's College London.

The feeling among some is that Hampshire’s cohort of fighters has nothing to do with Portsmouth. Instead they point out how they are radicalised online, often through Isis’s skilled use of social media. “It happens in their bedrooms, no one can reach them,” says Thakur, mimicking manic typing on the bonnet of a parked car.

Abu Abdullah was behind an Ask.Fm travel guide for would-be jihadists that formed part of an attempt to recruit young Britons to Iraq and Syria.

One user asked him: “I havent any traveling and i'm underage but what do you mean with no worries about money. honestly I don't know how to change money into tukish or syrian money. How does it work? I can't ask my parents or they will now [sic]”.

Friend says Yusra's family noticed she was on phone and computer a lot.

Sara Khan tells the Guardian that younger women may rebel against cultural practices using religion to challenge their parents' strictures on everything from arranged marriages to education. This can be problematic if they choose ultra-conservative sources as their guide. Such ultra-conservatism has gained ground recently while mainstream interpretations have been drowned out. “There is a feeling that the more hardline your interpretation, the more authentic it is, and that’s not the case at all — it’s just not true of Islamic law.”

Online pornography to be blocked by default, PM announces

 COMMENTS (1894)

Most households in the UK will have pornography blocked by their internet provider unless they choose to receive it, David Cameron has announced.

In addition, the prime minister said possessing online pornography depicting rape would become illegal in England and Wales - in line with Scotland.

Mr Cameron warned in a speech that access to online pornography was "corroding childhood".

The new measures will apply to both existing and new customers.

Mr Cameron also called for some "horrific" internet search terms to be "blacklisted", meaning they would automatically bring up no results on websites such as Google or Bing.

He told the BBC he expected a "row" with service providers who, he said in his speech, were "not doing enough to take responsibility" despite having a "moral duty" to do so.

He also warned he could have to "force action" by changing the law and that, if there were "technical obstacles", firms should use their "greatest brains" to overcome them.
